For Courtenay, with boundless love and gratitude Jackie

Conquering new dimensions of space has long been the visual artists' challenge.

To surpass the material necessity of the ground on which an image must rest the artist suggests a space beyond the surface. The depth of the illusory space carries the viewer into the potentials of the unknown and in so doing creates an experience that transports and transforms.

Photography since its inception, has expanded visual arts capacity between the described and the suggested.

Jackie Mathey's pinhole photographs of aircraft evoke an earlier age when the technology of aviation was metaphoric for the human desire to transcend its earthbound anchor and Marshall the heavens.
